This past year began with promise of a new decade and exciting things ahead. However, very quickly it all changed. Christmas usually brings with it an intensified feeling of love and fellowship, and Christmas 2020 shall go down in history as one where the very ideals we cherish in this time of year are the very things we must avoid. However, although there is still so much uncertainty in our lives, it has given us the opportunity to slow down and reflect on what is truly important. This Holiday may be different, but we can be thankful and appreciative of what we have, and find new ways to spread joy in this uncertain world. From us at Power House Art, we wish you all a pleasant, and most importantly, a safe and happy Christmas.

Kakee Ningeosiak

A self-taught carver who lives in Cape Dorset, Ningeosiak began carving at the age of sixteen and grew up surrounded by many other master carvers and graphic artists. His grandfather was the renowned Jamasie Teevee who contributed greatly to the yearly Dorset print collection from the 1960s to 80s. Ningeosiak works primarily with serpentine stone to create extremely intricate pieces that demand attention from all sides. We are fortunate to have these beautiful and playful belugas, carved from a single piece of serpentine and measuring eleven inches tall. The skill and attention to detail is remarkable and the lines and markings on the stone resonate with the reflections of sunlight underwater.

Esau Kirpanik

Kirpanik is a master carver from Igloolik who works primarily with white marble stone to create highly realistic and detailed pieces. He has a very distinct style, often carving multiple arctic animals within a main piece. He polishes certain sections of the stone while leaving others rough to emphasize certain characteristics of the stone, or to highlight different animals. His work combines a unique modern style while still keeping with traditional Inuit heritage and possesses a beautiful sense of movement and presence. We are pleased to present these two amazing polar bears, each showing a heightened sense of movement and grace. One has a narwhal carved on one side while a seal has been depicted on the other. The second bear has a wolf and also a caribou carved on the side.
